Elsewhere

SEATTLE — Robert H. O'Brien, 98, who ran the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer film studio during six years of big hits and uneven profitability, died Monday.

During his reign (1963 to 1969), the studio produced such cinema landmarks as Doctor Zhivago and 2001: A Space Odyssey.

Mr. O'Brien survived proxy fights against him in 1966 and 1967, but resigned under pressure in 1969, after the company announced that it expected losses.

Mr. O'Brien, a native of Helena, Mont., attended Beloit College and received a law degree from the University of Chicago in 1933. After working for the Securities and Exchange Commission, he was appointed a commissioner by President Franklin D. Roosevelt in 1942.

He later worked for Paramount Pictures and Loew's, which owned MGM before the companies split.

ASHBURN, Va. — Millard Lampell, 78, a screenwriter, novelist and songwriter who survived blacklisting to become an award-winning television writer, died Oct. 3 at his home in Ashburn, Va.

The cause was lung cancer, said his wife, Ramona.

Mr. Lampell was a socially conscious writer who communicated in every medium he could: books, songs, public speaking, movies and television. He wrote about unions and nuclear war, the Warsaw ghetto and life in the Army, Civil War orphans and integration. He was also a founder of the Almanac Singers, a pioneering urban folk group, with Woody Guthrie, Pete Seeger and Lee Hays.

In 1940 he began singing with the Almanac Singers. "We found ourselves performing at union meetings and left-wing benefits for Spanish refugees, striking Kentucky coal miners and Alabama sharecroppers," he recalled later.

But in 1950 Mr. Lampell was blacklisted, and work dried up. "My income dropped from a comfortable five figures to $2,000 a year," he wrote. He was subpoenaed in 1952 by the Senate Committee on Internal Security and refused to testify about his associations. Through the 1950s he supported himself as a ghostwriter for film and television.

The blacklist faded gradually. He went on to write television shows, including "The Adams Chronicles," Rich Man, Poor Man and The Orphan Train, which won a Writers Guild Award. Recently he and his wife assembled a book, O Appalachia, about folk artists.

Football-game shooting leaves Indiana girl dead

GARY, Ind. (AP) — A former student opened fire during a high school homecoming football game, killing an 18-year-old girl and wounding two others, police said.

Witnesses said they heard shots Friday night during the third quarter of a game at Lew Wallace High School's stadium, then saw the shooter running, jumping fences along the way.

Two girls walking past an opening in the stands under the press box were hit. A 16-year-old girl was grazed in the face; her 18-year-old friend was shot in the head and pronounced dead two hours later at a hospital.

A third victim, a 19-year-old male, was treated for a gunshot wound to his right forearm.

Gustavo McQuay, 18, of Gary, a former student at the high school, surrendered hours after the shooting and was being held pending the filing of charges.

"From what I heard, it appears they are random victims. There was no argument or fight before the shots," police Capt. Jerome Krebes said.
